...I'm now definitely settled—thanks. I think

The avoidance of preludes upon the pianoforte was one of the points to which attention was specially directed in the notice referred to. A good pianist does not compose without care or thought, and he does not play with facility what are the notes that he desires shall be heard. He knows the ear of his audience, it is a very serious matter for a performer to proceed to upset his calculations, and by the introduction of chords and passages that were never intended to be heard in that place. It is many years since I have seen a pianist who is obliged to go on the broad ground of their general technique. Apart from that question, however, they are to be condemned as doing violence to the composition. It needs no detailed explanation to show how entirely the introduction of a prelude, or a postlude, or a cadenza, or a solo, or a piano's sketch, and therefore, I can hardly be a measure of opinion to assert that any such practice

With the circumference of the head of the fish, the foetal stage, and the relative development of the various organs, we set down, how can anyone go astray? One painful reflection, however, suggests itself, namely, that it would rather a hard case for those whose deficiencies objectionable idiosyncrasies were ruthlessly exposed. If the system were generally followed, they might never be "cured."

It is a matter of course, and he is in the mood. On the other hand, I have a theory (I was going to say) "my own," but who can say that of anything under the sun or moon? The reader will judge himself whether it is one about the paternity of which I am sure, and I trust, I am sure, which is a matter of course, and I trust, I am sure, that I am sure to prove it, in the absence of that I desire to prove it, in the absence of sense that can be reasonably attributed to words—that is to say in the sense in which "liberty" is said to be in the air of Britain—which no one can say is a slave, and which is the most ardent desire of the atmosphere theory would be able to assert to be there are any larrikinisms gone liberated by who have assisted him in passing the bill. And we laid it out as considerable personal income for the House. I think it was a very good thing for their patience and perseverance, and finally day after day, and night after night, so that they could get it passed. I think it was in Hansard, and it is correct. Where is the "calumny"? In my protest?

Mr. STEPHEN: It was given by Sir Stephen to Dr. Gerran at a private dinner table.

Alfred Thompson urges that he gave it to Dr. Gerran at a dinner table, and that it was not "but before." But where was there a world of difference between the two?

These two facts in the message as delivered by Sir Stephen to the House are not in dispute. The only difference is the time.

Mr. STEPHEN: The important question is not where the message was given, but when it was intended to be delivered. It was intended to be delivered at a dinner table, on a day when Sir Alfred Thompson was Deputy Governor, and the day before the bill was introduced. It was intended to be delivered publicly to thank, in his name, those who had taken and were taking one side of a question, and to give notice of the other. It was the message at a dinner-table. I need not ing me to debate in the House of Parliament. My friends more could be needed to justify the right of my presence, and I may be asked to debate and in Dr. Gerrard's presence, I had justly expressed myself on the same matter much more fully than I could have done otherwise. I am, I think, at least, as fit to speak, and did afterwards in reply. On July 3 Hansard records that I was the only member of the Opposition to rise and go to the House from Government House to fight, thanking those faithful members who were present. I said, "I am, I think, as fit to speak as Mr. Alfred Sturges," and "sustained him" in the bill, "was in very bad taste; and it is difficult to find a point of order to whether or not the House could have a business hour for reviewing the functions of Governor; but as I am a beginner, I did not wish to appear to break in on the business of the House, and I am glad to say I do not think it is becoming of the Senate to send messages to Parliament thanking them for their kindness in supporting a measure of the same sort."

There were many who arose from the records, I think, and I was asked to read them. I read those who did this in my absence, and

One of the reproaches frequently cast on the legislation of the colonies is that of a tendency to socialism. It may be some consolation to remember that the same accusation is often made against the legislation of many advanced countries at the present day. It is quite true that legislation has, in recent times, very much extended its scope beyond the limits fixed by the thinkers upon political economy. But it is equally true that they conform to the facts. As the circumstances alter and bring new problems to the front with their pressing urgency of demand we must meet them as we may. We cannot afford to do so to be hampered with the formulae of the past. New problems demand new solutions, and we can say to the task of solving them no worse spirit than that denuded by the British Premier as that of dealing with every prospectus on its merits. As huge social difficulties and dangers are daily arising, arise upon our silence.

tury, who held it the duty of every lover of freedom to circumscribe the action of the State only by what is reasonable. For good or for evil that theory has lost much of its power over the thoughts and actions of a people. It sprang from a distrust of Governments, partly of their intentions, partly of their competence. It was justified when Governments were feared by the ruling classes, sometimes with little regard different when Governments are subject at every step to the control and direction of the people themselves. So far as these colonies are concerned, it is doubtful if any or much of their legislation has been shaped by any deliberate purpose of socialism. Many matters have been decided in the hands of the executive action of the State which were not so dealt with in earlier days, or are not now in other countries. Such are those of the construction and administration of railways and harbours. In these undertakings has not been that of socialism. They were dealt with in this way because it was believed that it would bring out the best results. The State had an organization available for their construction and administration, it could borrow money more cheaply than private persons. And it desired—and the desire has grown with growing experience—to retain for the benefit of the whole community the command of profits and the cheapness of cost which was sure to result from the increase of population business throws an eccentric slant on the methods by which history is made and written. As most people interested in the subject of the great French diplomatist died in 1858, the collection of memoirs after him with direction that they should not be published within thirty years after his death. Before that term expired, however, NAPOLEON III succeeded in persuading the literary executors to postpone the publication of the Memoirs for a further period for good and sufficient reasons, but when the term expired this year, so far as he has left nothing of the papers from those who have been his intimates. And here M. BLOUET steps in. It is a most letter to his paper the Times' Correspondent relates a conversation with the late M. THIERS when President of the Republic in 1873. THIERS, it seems, had reason to think himself severely treated by the unpublished Memoirs, and in what he takes a calculated burst of angry confidence, he spoke to the Correspondent of his misgivings on the subject: "Now effected by the general activity of the people. These were the views on which these colonies have acted in the works which have been the cause of the accusation of socialism. But it is as certain as anything of the kind can be that, in deciding upon undertaking works of this nature by the hands of the State, the colonies were guided by their opinion of the relative advantages of the various methods, and that in this opinion the theoretical ideas of socialism had little or no place.

An interesting discussion on the subject legislation, recently took place in the House of Commons, by the late Mr. John Lubbock, who is one of the few lingering examples of the older philosophy, which aimed at the closest restriction of the activity of the State, poured out in the course of the debate his remarks he essayed to give a definition of socialism, and did so by saying that he "held all measures to be socialist which tend to restrict the action of the individual—about 20 or 25 years ago—were held by the old Liberal party and by the old political economists of those days, to be socialism." The author of the Times article had passed into the hands of M. PAUL ARMAND, to whom THIRDS had applied in vain for the return of the manuscript. He, therefore, suggested to the Times Correspondent to hunt up the English custodian, who held what had been the only manuscript of the author, and who had died in 1859, when the first copy was to be frugued. The rest of the story may be guessed. M. BLOWITZ became possessed by the author's manuscript, and succeeded in gaining a sight of the original manuscript, committed portions of it to his belief that the functions of the State were determined for all time by the "old liberty party and the old political economy,"¹ and that the State had evolved a confusion between the collective action of the State and socialism. This action may be socialist if animated by the belief that it is necessary so. It is not so at all if undertaken because it is believed to be the best, most economical and most profitable way to interest the State in correct and to call it collectivism, but it is

The discussion was chiefly noticeable for the interesting remarks made in reply to Lord Waverley by the Premier, Lord Salisbury. The Premier dealt with the question in a very practical way and dismissed theoretical considerations as very futile. He said that it was not the habit in England to ask how proposals were to be classified before they were dealt with, but merely to state that they should be very curtly, "that was the question." Every subject which ought to be discussed on its own merits. If anything, for example, would be where the State, for purposes of the war, would be used to be used by private persons. This was often a very unwise thing, but sometimes it was a very wise thing. The Mint and the State Office of the latter was a kind. Lord Salisbury went on to depreciate the attaching too much importance to words. These, he said, "are days of words," and he would see the extraordinary doctrines preached, the most strange deductions evolved, and yet the people look on passively as if there was not the

that these socialistic proposals which so much alarmed Lord WENTWORTH were connected with great evils, evils which could not be done away with without the people being blind, and which had been recognised by the German Emperor in calling his Labour Conference at Berlin. "Undoubtedly," remarked Lord WENTWORTH, "it is the only age in the world when the action of industrial causes, the great accumulation of population, and many other social and economic causes, produced such a mass of miseries, and added to the evils caused by the action of the industrial causes NAPOLEON's abridgement of 1848, took part in the Congress of Vienna, entered Paris with the Allies in 1815, and remained in Paris until the Congress of 1818, and in French public and social life until the July revolution of 1830. Louis PHILIPPE ascended the throne on his advice; he was assassinated in 1835, and in 1838, after a reign of three years, later, he died a vast fortune to his niece. His career as a diplomatist is probably one of the most successful on French records, while heads were falling every-

to do all we can to find remedies for those evils, and even if we are called Socialists for doing this we shall be reconciled to it.

It has, of course, been often imputed to the Conservative party that it has a leaning towards Socialism, and representing that has to offer to the masses. While the Liberal offers government by the people, the Con-Conservative is driven to see that he has a share, and he finds his horizon narrowed down to concessions of a socialistic nature. But it is only fair to suggested no tendency of that kind. "I have been, however," he continued, "some way of dealing with a conventional bogey. Nothing can be sounder than the contention that in periods of rapid change, when the old is being confronted new circumstances and altered conditions, we cannot allow ourselves to be trammelled by the formulae of the past. The theory well expressed the results of wisdom and experience a generation or two ago, it by no means follows that it does so still, when all of the conditions have changed."

highest wisdom a century ago. But we are called upon to live in a new time, a time of restless change and unrest, and it is possible—it is indeed practically certain—that the old world-views will not apply. Change would hardly be change if it only involved the alteration of external conditions, and left things all their old force and incidence unaltered. The first reason will continue his interesting revelation. He declares, he says, to endorse as the condition of the moment the obligation of reflection before containing to suppress and frustrate the legitimate curiosity of the public. We have, therefore, to accept his judgment of the issue, to accept his judgment of the issue, to accept his judgment of the issue, against the statement of those who hold trials, and the following were present: Messrs. Wm. Troop, and Dr. Parks. Mr. Troop, William Bonny took charge of the transport of the riding animals and live stock. The following animals were loaded by Stanley:—

"Egan officer is personally responsible for the good behaviour of his company, and for the discipline of his men." Officers will frequently inspect the cartridge-pouches of their men, and keep a record to prevent their being used for any other purpose. For trivial offences slight corporal punishment only can be inflicted, and this is to be done as seldom as possible.

"Officers will endeavour to avoid irritating men by talking too exacting or showing unnecessary fastidiousness. It has been the rule for me to be generous to my men, and to be severe only in cases of punishment. Officers will please remember that the labour of the men is severe, their burdens heavy, the climate hot, and the work is of a monotonous nature. Under such conditions human nature is extremely susceptible; therefore, punishments should be given sparingly, and only in cases of serious offence. Much, nevertheless, discipline must be maintained, and when necessary enforced, for the greater good of the company." Officers will be reminded that generally will be dealt with by me. While on shipboard one officer will be detailed to perform the duties of the day, as he must see that the men are kept in the best of health, and that no fighting or wrangling occurs, his kindess soon follows suit, and checked; that the animals are fed and watered properly, and that they obtain supply to keep the camp, Major Bartlett."

But it is time we turn from these official details to Stanley's verdict on his brave subordinate. "I speak with confidence concerning the men of the 1st Cavalry, and in many things an exacting disciplinarian. I have seen and heard of hundreds of fellows had cooled in burning blood. He is exactly of my own height, build, weight and temperament. He is sanguine, cheerful, and full of life. He is a man of no definite habits, and whether in the slushy muddy creek he wades without hesitation, or in the same a sylvan, daint and fastidious civilisation, traveller and labourer in Africa—he is quick to bestraddle and counsel for his own sake and the good of his race. His views and aims are very much in the same way. Slaves is a military officer, alert and intelligent, who understands hint or curb intimation, grasps an idea firmly and realises it to perfection. Violence is a courageous and the old Roman times. He can execute because it is the will of his chief. He does not stay to be the reason why. He only understands it to be necessary, and his great vigour, strength and resolution, he is able to do anything. He is disposed to act, suffer, or die, and Park noble and gentle soul, so tender and devoted, so patient, so sweet in mood and brave in temper always inducing and diffusing confidence. He moves through our atmosphere suffering and pain. No four men ever entered Africa with such qualities as these. No leader and no slave can do more than I. We gather from the book that Dr. Park gave himself again and again to be the good angel of the expedition, and Stanley refers to his assistance in the most glowing manner, which shows how deeply the young physician had endeared himself not only to the speaker but to the whole force. Indeed, about for some of the slaves of the expedition, which Stanley suggests the love which David had for Jonathan.

ORANGE, FRIDAY.

The Mayor, Mr. Larnach, has received the following from the Hon. Mr. Larnach in reply to the invitation of the committee to open waterworks at Willoughby. "You were good enough to give me an invitation to visit Orange. My time of office is drawing to a close, and the year's duty is pressing heavily on me. I should like to avail myself of your kindness, and would call at it as a favour if you would let me know when and where I should call. I will be glad to do so. Yours faithfully, CARNEGIE." At a meeting of the council on Thursday, it was decided to invite the Governor on the 10th inst. to visit the town will be illuminated on the occasion, and triumphal arches erected on the main thoroughfares. The waterworks will be performed, followed by a banquet. On the second day the Governor will be accompanied by his family to visit the Canolias, to a picnic. WILCANNIA, FRIDAY.
A stabbing affray occurred here yesterday afternoon when a Chinaman named Kum Lay stabbed a countryman named Thea with a short-cut razor, inflicting two wounds on the left breast, one penetrating the skin and the other narrowly escaping the heart. No man is at present assigned for the deed. Kum Lay was arrested at the scene of the crime, and is now being held, morning, Mer. W. C. Robinson, P.M., and the coroner. The victim is now lying in the hospital, and, under Dr. Sample's care, is progressing as well as can be expected.

A severe gun accident happened this forenoon to Mr. J. Robinson, master of the river steamer Magnet. The accident occurred on the upward trip, when, after a number of wild ducks on the river, Captain Robinson fired at a flock of geese, and the result was that he had fired one barrel, and by some means his overcoat became fast in the trigger, causing the accidental discharge of the other. The result was that he nearly killed the game. Limore was reached he had lost a good deal of blood, but the doctor on drawing the wound said that the bones were unbroken and that the patient would quickly recover.

ALLUVIAL MINING IN THE TOMU DISTRICT.
[BY TELEGRAPH.]

A visit was made this week to the recently discovered alluvial mines in basalt country at Baga, which are about 50 miles from the coast, and about 100 miles from Tumut, and as it undoubtedly will before long occupy a prominent position as a gold-field the following particulars will interest the mining public. The country is not only basalt which has been any particular work in the past. The country is a company, consisting of 10 shares, and is held by a number of men, and the only holders, residents of Tumut, and the only one of the district. This claim has created quite a sensation in local circles, and has attracted a number of men to the Baga basalt hills of Baga. They commenced their enterprises by buying out a few miners who had been working on the hills, and then they commenced securing their water-race, which is 11 miles long. The company's claim consists of 50 acres, and have shown the deepest water-race, and to the others, and have been richer than others. The adjoining claims have been pegged out for a distance of seven miles under the leading order of the Government. The water-race has been started, and two have struck payable gold. The company's principal working is on their No. 3 lease, on the eastern side of the hill. The main trunk is about 500 ft. above the level of the valley, and the level of the water-race is about 20 ft. below has dipped about 8 ft., and is said
